Foothill Station Donated Monitor

A frequency and modulation monitor was donated recently to Foothill College's educational FM radio station, KFJC, according to college officials.

The $1,900 instrument was given to the college by the Hewlett-Packard Co. of Palo Alto.

Ken Gray, an engineer at the electronics instrument firm and a student at Foothill College, arranged for the gift.

Bob Ballou, student station manager, said that the unit will be installed within the next week and used to monitor the center frequency of the station, which is required by law to be within 3,000 cycles of 88.5 megacycles.
