America needs 'New compassion'

By TERESA EVANS

America needs a new kind of compassion, said The Rev. Cecil Williams, pastor of San Francisco's Glide Memorial Church, as he addressed an audience of close to 200 people at Stanford Memorial Church, Sunday. His speech was part of the March for Hunger program sponsored by the Stanford East African Relief Organization (SEARO).

An estimated 75 people carrying signs and banners walked from Lytton Plaza in Palo Alto to the Stanford Campus to hear Williams and five other speakers. The marchers were accompanied by Flo, a 27-foot inflatable blue whale that had "Save the Humans" written on its water spout.

Williams started his talk by saying that poverty was the most humiliating experience a person or group could ever encounter. He quoted Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. as saying, "Poverty is like a notorious octopus which stretches all over the world."

Contrasting the lot of the poor with life in America, Williams said most people in the world have never seen a dentist or physician, there are no support systems such as social workers and ministers as in America today. "We are a privileged people," he stated.

Right now, Williams said, the world agenda is to supply and re-supply those who have. But, in order to make sure famine is not a reality in the future, "The poor must become our priority."

"We need a new kind of compassion in America," Williams said. "We need to become responsive to people who are in need." One way he suggested is by not waiting to hear of great need on TV.

"We must go get the information ourselves, not wait until the information gets us," he said. After getting the information, he added, we must try to inform the people who have power to do something about it.

Williams said he thought that if people in America wanted to eliminate poverty they could, but that the will to do so isn't here. Mentioning that there are those who benefit economically from poverty, Williams said, "What we have in America is not a deficit of resources, but a deficit of human will."

Making an oblique reference to the recent scandals involving relief aid organizations, Williams said that too many hold off on giving because they want to know what will be done with their money. "Well let me tell you something brothers and sisters, you're not giving that much money anyway."

The audience applauded when Williams said, "We have to take the politics out of hunger. I don't care if a country is Marxist or not; it's the people who count, not the ideology."

Williams mentioned the plans at Glide Memorial for Super Bowl. They will have a big screen set up and the poor people in his congregation have decided that they will come to watch and give their money for famine relief.

"The have-nots giving to the have-nots," he said. "If the have-nots can, then certainly the haves can do it also."

Other speakers at the program included: Worku Negash and Awetu Simesso from SEARO, Fesseha Atlaw of the Ethiopian Famine Relief Committee, Joseph Edozien of the Stanford African Students Association and Daniel Schwartzman of the Red Cross.

Simesso said that even if the tide is reversed in Africa there will still be millions of people with permanent brain damage as a result of starvation. The debate and analysis about causes and cures for famine goes on, he said, "but there can be no more important issue than the

'Auditing system' allows class repetition

By KENNARD GRAY

There is a new system at Foothill for students who wish to take a course beyond the number of times permitted. It is called auditing.

"Under the auditing system," said Dean of Instruction Irel Lowe, "students who have taken courses and repeated them the maximum number of times allowed but wish to repeat them again without receiving credit can do so." In the past, Lowe said, students were not allowed to go beyond the limit in class repetition. "Now auditing makes it possible."

Lowe said students who might benefit from this new procedure include those who wish to re-take a course for personal enhancement.

"This includes students who might have taken a course a while back and wish to refresh their memory."

A student must have received a grade of "C" or better in order to audit a class, said Lowe.

Audit requests are available in the Registrar's Office and must be signed by the instructor and the registrar before the student submits the request to the college cashier, said Lowe.

The audit fee is $10 per unit. "However, if the student is presently enrolled in six or more units, fees for the first three units of audit are waived," said Lowe. "Approved audit requests will be accepted beginning this week."

PE program initiated with no state funding

By BILL MUSICK

Despite the veto of AB2638 by the California Governor in January of 1984, Foothill College has implemented a pioneer matriculation program in the physical education department.

Matriculation provides individual counseling and testing prior to registration. After skills are assessed, schedules are developed to enable the student to meet his or her educational goals. Coaches and counselors monitor the students involved with athletic matriculation and assist with planning and scheduling.

Bill AB2638 was to have funded the matriculation program for 12 community colleges, including Foothill, and would have required the Chancellor of the California community colleges to fully implement specified matriculation services at these schools. The bill would have appropriated over $10 million to implement the specified services and would have required the Chancellor to develop a plan to phase in participation of all community colleges over a period of three years.

Following a proposal by Dr. Thomas Clements, president of Foothill College, Bill Abbey, athletic director, and Dick Charles, dean of students, the program, without state funding, was accepted by the physical education department and the counseling offices at the end of the 1984 spring quarter.

The matriculation program had its start prior to the beginning of the 1984 fall quarter with all new student athletes required to participate in the college's assessment program prior to registration.

In trying to assess the program, Dean Charles said, "We won't be able to have a true evaluation until after two or three years, but I think things are going along fine. The coaches and counselors are supportive and through the extra effort

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. (January 15, 1929 – April 4, 1968)

There was a great man who dreamed of economic and education equality as well as peace among all men. The man that I speak of is the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. If it were not for the love and integrity of such a man, where would I and many others like me be?

Dr. King was an educator. He taught people how to fight for what is an inalienable right called Freedom. He encouraged non-violent protests and opened the eyes of many through his powerful oratory. However, among his many great achievements, his demand for educational equality weighs most heavy on my mind.

Has his dream of educational equality been realized? Yes, it has. The opportunity for higher education among minorities has risen since his day. I am living proof of his dream being actualized. Other students also share this opinion. We have all been given an opportunity to enrich our lives and enhance our knowledge from what is now a legacy. I won't deny that there have been many setbacks in attaining the goals we set for ourselves. Economic factors are by far the largest hinderance of our day.

But, let us not lose the direction of the question posed. We won't dwell on the setbacks, but work diligently and peacefully to change them. We must become inspired through his works to achieve the highest level of personal standards. Be proud people, for you have the freedom to enjoy life's finer things – if that is what you want. I know each and every one of you will have only the fondest memory of Dr. King. Students, I speak to you directly. This may be a new day, but the needs of the people have not changed. We all want peace, justice and equality in every aspect of life we pursue.

—Sancha Haysbert

when Dr. King delivered his most famous oration, "I Have A Dream," before 250,000 demonstrators and a national audience; the Birmingham Movement organized by SCLC in 1963 and its direct result, an end to legal segregation through the Civil Rights Act of 1964; the Selma Movement which regained the right to vote through the Voting Rights Act of 1965; the awarding of the 1964 Nobel Prize for Peace to Dr. King – the third Black man, twelfth American, and youngest person ever to win it.

But there were low points: the widespread and vicious attacks on Dr. King when he acted and spoke out against the war in Vietnam; the constant violence against the movement; the flood of hate mail and threats; the economic system which exploits the poor and caused Dr. King to conceive the idea for the Poor People's Campaign for which he had begun to prepare just before his assassination in Memphis on April 4, 1968.

Leader's life recounted

FAMILY BACKGROUND

Martin Luther King, Jr., was born Jan. 15, 1929, in Atlanta Georgia, the second child and first son of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Sr., and Mrs. Alberta Williams King.

EDUCATION

Young Martin received his elementary and secondary education in the public schools of Atlanta. He was an Early Admissions student at Morehouse College in Atlanta. He graduated from that institution in 1948 [at the age of 19] with a B.A. degree.

He went to Crozer Technological Seminary in Chester, Pennsylvania, where he became the first Black person to be elected president of the student body and graduated first in his class – the class of 1951.

Dr. King was married on June 18, 1953, to Coretta Scott at her home in Marion, Alabama. They had four children: Yolanda Denise,

Martin Luther, III, Dexter Scott and Bernice Albertine.

LEADERSHIP

The contemporary nonviolent movement began in Montgomery on December 1, 1955, with the arrest of a Black woman, Mrs. Rosa Parks, for refusing to give up her seat to a White man on a city bus.

At the first mass meeting of the boycott, on December 5, 1955, Dr. King said: "If you will protest courageously, and yet with dignity and Christian love, when the history books are written in future generations, the historians will have to pause and say, 'There lived a great people – a Black people – who injected new meaning and dignity into the veins of civilization.' This is our challenge and our overwhelming responsibility."

There were high points: the March on Washington in 1963,

Triathalon is sabbatical focus

By BILL MUSICK

Hank Ketels, physical education instructor and assistant track coach at Foothill, is planning to do research for his third book when he takes a sabbatical leave for three quarters during the 1985-86 school year.

"This will be a fact finding and information gathering period," said Ketels. "There is a definite need for the correlation of information on triathalon training and I hope to make Foothill College the best place to obtain this knowledge."

"Foothill initiated a program last spring, and it is one of the first programs in the nation dealing with triathalon training," said Ketels. "Students can learn about their physical limitations and improve their abilities to cope with and handle stress. The multiple training in bicycling, swimming and running works to vastly improve the cardiovascular system."

While on sabbatical, Ketels plans to attend the Ironman competition in Hawaii and visit training sites in Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island and California to interview participants and medical people associated with the triathletes. Ketels will attend clinics and lectures on sports medicine, nutrition, injuries and related subjects at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco.

Ketels has been at Foothill since 1967 and coached the cross-country and track teams from 1967 to 1980. His first book, "Safe Skin and Scuba Diving," published in 1975, is used as a textbook by major universities. The book was edited by World War II frogman Jack McDowell, who had been out of diving for years when he took one of Ketels' diving classes. Later, Ketels decided to make him a co-author.

In 1979 the two authors completed a two-year task of revising and expanding the textbook, resulting in the publication of a new book entitled "Sports Illustrated Scuba Diving." This book was designed more for the general readership of scuba enthusiasts.
