Shock, horror, anger, and grief expressed

Campus reacts to bombing

By HERB MUKTARIAN

Foothill College will be flying the flag of the United States at half-mast in memory of more than 200 U.S. servicemen killed in Beirut, Lebanon, Sunday morning.

The flag will be at half-mast until further notice from the Foothill-De Anza College District Board of Trustees.

"This action has been taken in honor of the lives lost in Lebanon in the service of our country," said Foothill President Thomas H. Clements in a memorandum sent to faculty and staff Monday.

The reaction of Foothill students and staff is one of shock, horror, anger and sadness at the death of U.S. soldiers. But, the opinion on what action should be taken by the government varies widely.

"I don't know what the U.S. is going to do. If we pull out, okay," said psychology major, Steve Simoni. "But if they are going to stay, then they should go in with full force."

Kurt Hipp took the same point of view as Simoni. "If the U.S. is going to be in Lebanon, they should make their presence felt."

English instructor Bill Walker was appalled. "I'm convinced we don't know what we're doing over there. The major reason we are over there is oil. Peacekeeping has nothing to do with it."

Walker said, "If you give a man a gun and tell him he will be shot at, but cannot shoot back, what do you think he will do? What chance did those poor boys have to fire back?"

"I am angry about the glory being piled on the caskets of the dead," Walker stated. "That type of glory is dead. That is why they call the flag 'Old Glory'."

"We are horrified by 200 Marines being killed, and we are horrified by the 269 civilians killed on the Korean airliner. The U.S. won't stop being horrified until the figures reach the 10 or 15 thousand mark. That's something we can cope with," said Walker.

Student Dave Phares said, "Poor security showed when the truck got through. I think violent retaliation is definitely in order," said Phares, expressing a different view. "We should show whatever group is responsible they shouldn't mess with America."

'What chance did those poor boys have...

"I find it frightening," said Associated Students of Foothill College (ASFC) President Leslie Fay. "My main concern is that we don't use this as an excuse to go to war. I hope people will not forget how horrible war really is."

"This time it was TNT. What will happen when they (terrorists) get a nuclear warhead?" said Fay.

Neil Anderson related the incident to an earlier time. "We never should have been there in the first place. This seems like deja vu of the early 60s with Vietnam, and the escalation of the war that resulted."

Law and Society major Judith Nelson felt, "A re-evaluation of our position and purpose in Lebanon is in order."

Dave Mohr, who has a biology degree, said, "We should get out of there now! We did not belong there in the first place."

Ex-Marine and General Ed student Doug Turner said, "We should be there. I feel we should send more troops. I am going to see my enlistment officer today and see if I should go back in."

"An unfortunate situation," said Environmental Design major Bruce Jett. "This is just one step closer to war. We may be way over our heads already. We should get out before it's too late."

The U.S. government has dispatched 300 new Marines to Lebanon, to replace those injured or killed. The only change in U.S.-Lebanon policy is a directive to beef up security.

If and what military action will be taken remains to be seen.

The feeling of the people at Foothill is that some action must be taken, and that the U.S. cannot sit still and do nothing.

Clements ponders tuition

By HERB MUKTARIAN

"Chancellor Thomas Fryer and our District Board led the state in coming forth with a reasonable tuition compromise," said Foothill President Thomas Clements in a SENTINEL interview last Thursday after returning from a statewide meeting of the Chief Executive Officers (CEO) in Monterey. "I am very pleased our district took the initiative."

"An honest assessment of where we and the community are," said Clements, "is that some form of tuition is necessary to save Community Colleges as an institution, even though we are opposed to it."

"We would serve no one by sticking by our guns, and then going down in flames," said Clements.

"Studies have shown most district's major problems revolve around tuition," said Clements, "and 70 percent of the general public feels community college students should pay some tuition."

State Community College Chancellor Jerry Hayward spoke to the CEO conference, and expressed the need to keep pressure on for a special session of the Legislature, and each board should express its stand on tuition.

Clements feels frustration in getting community college leaders to agree on a direction. "The leaders seem to have trouble putting their individual needs aside to concentrate on getting funding for all the colleges."

"We are sending so many different messages to Sacramento that we're not accomplishing anything," said Clements. "This kind of splintered approach to the Legislature is very destructive."

Clements said, "We [the community colleges] need to organize into one voice, vote (Continued on page 4)

We won't remove troops now; we're committed

It is too late for President Reagan to remove U.S. troops from Lebanon.

It is also too late for the more than 200 dead Marines. They will be coming home in boxes. As some in the government are fond of saying, "We are now committed."

U.S. Marines and seamen were killed as they slept at the Marine Operations Building in Beirut Sunday morning. A truck loaded with 2,000 pounds of TNT crashed into the lobby, exploded, and brought the building to the ground.

Minutes later, a second bombing killed over 80 French soldiers and injured 15. Almost 50 Americans and 35 French were still missing in the rubble as of Monday.

Hours later, while Marines in Beirut were digging their dead comrades out of the rubble, the Marines began shipping the first of 300 new soldiers to Lebanon, from Camp Lejeune, North Carolina.

The president had said that the United States would not be intimidated by terrorists, and the mission in Lebanon remains . . . unfulfilled.

Reagan has made it clear the Marines will stay in Lebanon. The marines will probably have more security, and more freedom in firing their weapons, but the glaring fact remains; the Marines sent will take the place of those who died, and it will be business as usual in Beirut.

Reagan has also said, "We have vital interests in Lebanon and our actions in Lebanon are in the cause of world peace." It sounds like Reagan committed a Freudian slip. A country is not fighting for "the cause of world peace," if that country has vital interests in the very country it is peacekeeping in.

There's no way Reagan will ever remove the troops and leave our 'vital interests' unprotected. Seemingly, this decision will stand even at the cost of human life.

The option Reagan had to pull out has been effectively cut off.

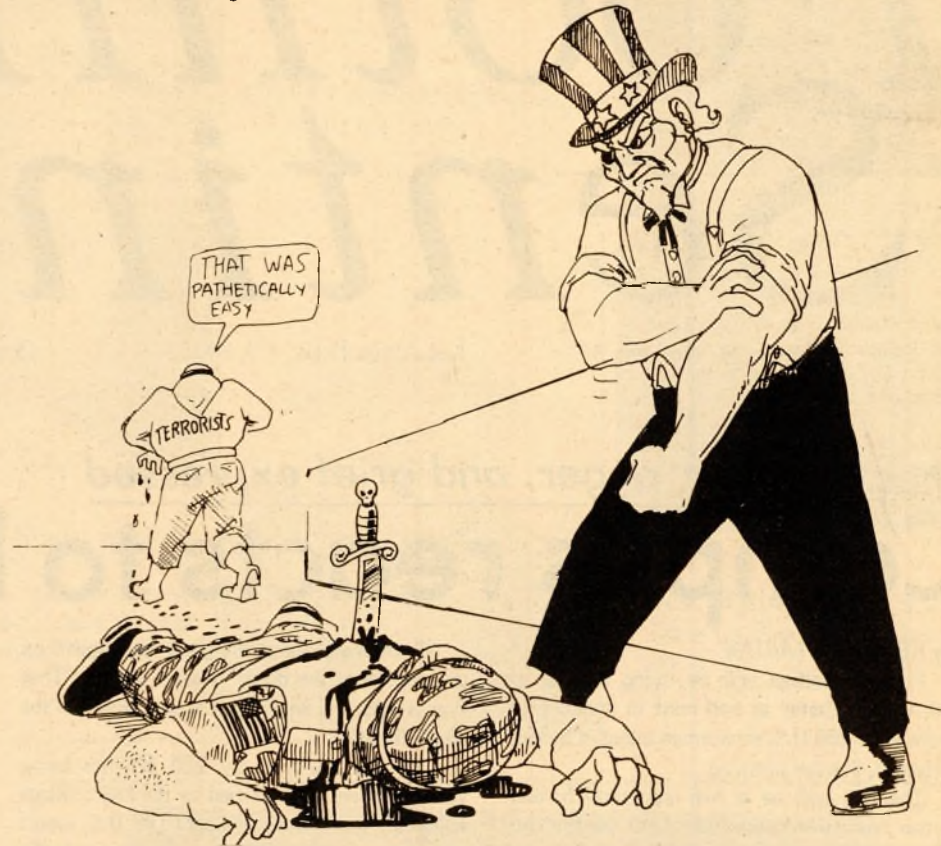

This leaves two basic options, where a week ago there were three.

Option number one is to let things go on as they are now, with a few minor changes.

The other option is to take a swift action that will end ruthless sniper killings and terrorist attacks against all peacekeeping troops.

In either case, the ball is in the president's court.

Youth and experience mix in Shakespearean play

By SUSANNA SCHWEICKHARDT

It's a quiet afternoon ten days before the opening. The air lies still in the theater and the actors' voices sound small as they have their first run-through of William Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night."

It's a gentle comedy which revolves around mistaken identity and unrequited love. A brother and sister are separated in a shipwreck and each fears that the other is dead. The sister, Viola, finds employment as a page in the Duke Orsino's household by disguising herself as a boy and thus becoming her brother's "twin." She falls in love with the duke but is sent to deliver his love letters to the countess Olivia. Olivia is not interested in the duke but falls in love with Cesario, as Viola calls herself.

Daryl Lindstrom-Wender, who plays Viola, says that Shakespeare is really no harder to perform than modern playwrights. "The only difference between Shakespeare and the others is that Shakespeare gives you better words to say. If anything, that makes it easier."

This is Lindstrom-Wender's first time acting in a production at Foothill, though she has been on the part-time drama faculty since spring quarter of this year and has coached voice and drama at Boston University and University of Rhode Island.

"Productions come off well here," Lindstrom-Wender said. "There is major enthusiastic support from the faculty, the students and the community."

Foothill productions are not like those performed in high school where the actors are full-time students who decide they would like to act. Many of the actors at Foothill are enrolled in one drama course at Foothill and are only on campus for rehearsals and performances.

Ruedi Vest, who plays Olivia's steward, Malvolio, feels that this is all right.

"This way the younger people can learn from the older people," he said. "The problem with all student productions is the sameness of age and experience." Vest is experienced in Shakespeare and other drama. He has played many leading roles with Foothill and the Los Altos Conservatory Theater.

Vest put out the cigarette he had been smoking and dropped it outside the stage door. The area was thickly strewn with butts, this is where the performers come to quiet their strained nerves and ready themselves for performance.

F. LeRoi Dudley, who plays Sir Toby Belch, Olivia's uncle, has been involved with Shakespeare for about 12 years. "Shakespeare relies on experience and acting skills. I wouldn't recommend it for beginning actors." Though he plays a comic character, Dudley says that he feels straight drama is his forte. "Comedy requires an intense sense of timing. If you say a funny line at the wrong time it will just fall flat," he explains. "I don't think I have that timing."

In contrast to the other actors, Richard Roitinger, who plays Viola's brother, Sebastian, has little experience in drama and has never done Shakespeare before. Roitinger said Sebastian is a hard character to play "because he is normal. He's mostly there as a straight man for the other characters." Roitinger took drama at Palo Alto High School but was not in any production there.

Students paid twice monthly

By JOHN WILEY GARNER

Students employed by Foothill College are now paid semi-monthly, according to Student Payroll Clerk Frances Armenta. Student employees are now paid on the weekday nearest to the 7th or 22nd of each month.

The Budget Development Committee changed the system this month to ease the workload on the District Accounting Office, Armenta said. Under the previous system, the DAO suffered great stress when student and classified employee paydates coincided.

Armenta said the new Student Payroll Schedule can be obtained from the Financial Aids Office between 10 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. and that new time cards are available from each department secretary.

"I am hopeful the CEO and the district board officers will work more closely together to hammer out a compromise."

The CEO is comprised of community college presidents and chancellors, and meets twice a year, in the fall and spring.

GAIN A SKILL WHILE YOU GAIN THE MONEY FOR COLLEGE.

With the Army College Fund, you learn a skill while you accumulate the money for college. So you don't waste any of your precious time, or stand still while your college money is growing.

To qualify, you must be a high school graduate, make good marks on the Armed Services qualification test, and enlist and train in one of several selected skills which will challenge your mind.

You can start immediately growing the money for college. And for every $1 you save out of your salary (which is more than $570 per month), the government will add $5. Or more. If you put up $100 a month, after a 2-year enlistment, you'll have $15,200 for college. Plus a skill that could help you decide which direction to take in college. And the future.
