Remodeling of campus center and forum completed

Nitzan Beck
LA VOZ NEWS

Today the Campus Center and the Forum will be accessible to all students after months of renovations of the two buildings. Reconstruction of the Campus Center began in March, and the Forums in January, under measures E and C respectively.

Some of the changes to the buildings include new carpeting, renovated classrooms and new paint. In addition to the renovations, the Campus Center will now provide two brand new food vendors, Una Mas! and Hong Fu. These will be the only outside of school food vendors in addition to other food stations. Food vendors will no longer be located outside of the building as they were in previous years.

The Campus Center will provide a Peace Room. This room was passed by the Campus Center Advisory Committee, a committee formed by representatives from the De Anza Student Body and the Inter Club

Council, to discuss matters regarding the reconstruction of the Campus Center.

"The Peace room was the huge talk of last year and the year before," said De Anza College Trustee Jordan Eldridge. "It's a contemplative, prayer, meditation, relaxation place."

Eldridge met with the committee for 12 months, each session lasting one hour. During the time he met with the committee he was the Inter-Club Council Chair of programs.

"We also got to pick out the ICC office," said Eldridge. "We got to pick out the tile and the paint."

De Anza Student Body Senator, Kurt Pham, met with the committee in the spring of 2007. He said they mainly discussed issues such as making the Campus Center more accessible and larger.

"I think it was mostly about expanding the campus center and upgrading all the technical stuff so it would be ready for

Besides the many advantages to the reconstruction of the buildings, some felt there was a disadvantage to the remodeling.

"I didn't like how it took a long time in the summer. So it was pretty inconvenient for new students to get financial aid," said Pham. "It took them a long time. They closed down the upper part for a whole year. That was pretty bad."

However, Eldridge disagreed. Eldridge said the remodeling enhanced the learning environment.

The next project under construction involves a performance hall, one of which De Anza has never had before. According to Donna Jones-Dulin the performance hall is projected to be completed by the winter quarter of 2009.

"The new performance hall will have 400 seats and it'll be for dance, it'll be for film," said Jones-Dulin. "It will be open for the public, also." The De Anza web site states the building will be 20,000 square feet and will provide space for the Euphrat Museum.

The performance hall is classified under measure E, which was passed in 1999 for the Foothill-De Anza District with the intention of improving and helping the district meet current health, safety and instruction standards. The measure was passed by a 71.9 percent margin.

The budget for measure E is $248 million for the entire district. Approximately $130 million dollars have been reserved specifically for De Anza.

Past projects under the measure included the construction of the Kirsch Building, Science Center and the Student and Community Services Building.

Measure C was passed in 2006 as a district wide decision with a budget of $490.80 million.

DE ANZA VOICES: Are college parties out of control?

"I've never been to a college party, but they do get out of control. A good example is that baseball party where that girl got hurt. Sometimes people take things too far and don't know how to control themselves. In my opinion, they do get out of control."

Raj Bhullar
advertising/design

"I think it is because a 17-year-old just got raped or something by a De Anza student and I think it's partially her fault because she shouldn't be that drunk."

Jen Voong
psychology/business major

"Some of them, yes. I would say because they're not thinking. Usually at college parties, the people are maybe 18 or 20 years old, they're not really thinking too much, they're just living for the moment. They're focusing on themselves and some of them are just being stupid as far as drugs and alcohol and being irresponsible. I'm all for partying but you got to be responsible."

Gina Aquino
journalism

"That's a hard question. Probably yes and the idea is that it's a college party, so it's going to happen, so I don't know if there's anything you can do about it."

Prosecutor to represent witnesses in rape case

Nitzan Beck
LA VOZ NEWS

Lawyer Jim Hammer has pledged to push for criminal charges, representing the three De Anza College students who witnessed a sexual assault at a party on March 3. Hammer is a former San Francisco prosecutor and is currently a television legal analyst.

Although Hammer's pledge to push for criminal charges was made public on Aug. 7, the State Attorney General's office, which is reviewing the case has made no new statement. Santa Clara District Attorney Dolores Carr asked State Attorney General Jerry Brown to review her decision to not press charges against two De Anza baseball players in an alleged rape of a 17-year-old due to insufficient evidence.

"Sexual-assault charges can be difficult to prove beyond a reasonable doubt," wrote Carr in an opinion piece on the NBC11 Web site. Carr, a former leader of the Sexual Assault Unit in the district attorney's office said that parties where young people become intoxicated pose particular problems. The credibility and memories of witnesses are easier to attack.

The State Attorney General's office said they have no evidence to think Carr erred in her judgment, but are still investigating.

During a San Jose city council meeting, the three witnesses, April Grolle, Lauren Chief Elk and Lauren Bryeans each received plaques and a presentation of commendation from mayor Chuck Reed for their willingness to come forward and helping the victim.

Rape statistics from the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape

- 16.3 percent probability that a rapist will be sent to prison
- 67 percent of victims of rape cases reported to law enforcement agencies are under the age of 18, while 34 percent are children under the age of 12 and 14 percent are children under the age of six.
- 90 percent of surveyed college women, who were sexually assaulted, knew their attacker before the assault
- 50.8 percent chance that an arrest will be made when a rape is reported

top 10 tips to survive De Anza College

MAKE IT THROUGH THE QUARTER

Julia Eckhardt, Joanna Alday and Anna Rendall
LA VOZ NEWS

Welcome to all the new students, and hello again to all the returning students. Every year our campus sees new people come and other people leave. However, some things never seem to change. For example, no matter how much we all complain, campus traffic at lunchtime is impossible and finals week invokes just as much fear as it did the last quarter. Take some advice from a couple of De Anza vets and find out how to handle this quarter like a pro, whether it's your first quarter or your eighth.

1 Find a counselor to help you understand what classes to take and in what order, especially if you know what major you want to pursue. They really are helpful, and too many students take unnecessary classes unknowingly. Many of our La Voz staff members can attest to this fact. At the very least, use web sites like www.assist.org to look at college transfer agreements and major requirements.

2 Don't be a parking lot menace, and know how to avoid being a victim of those who are.

Be aware of how close you park to your neighbor and at least pretend attempting not to hit the cars who park too close to yours. If you require further evidence, please refer to the dings on the sides of our cars, or the stab like puncture wounds on our bumpers. Try parking in between two cars that are way nicer than yours. They wouldn't even think of dinging your car, lest they ding theirs.

3 Join a club or an organization that interests you or serves your major.

Even if you are unable to be mega involved, the experience will be enriching and look great on your resume.

4 Get to know your teachers more like people and less like intimidating authority figures. You're an adult now. Guess what? So are they, and they're here to help you.

5 Sit in the front row on the first day of class. In elementary school, it was always the thing to sit at the back. In college, sitting in the front could be the difference between an A or a B.

6 Invest in a planner. You'll be doing work and school together, not to mention those extra activities. Write down everything just to avoid forgetting anything.

7 Rate-my-professor.com is the best way to know what type of teachers you have. The site is perfect for new students who don't yet have fellow students to warn them about the rotten eggs.

8 Use your DASB card. You pay six dollars per quarter for it, so you might as well use it. For example, at "Chipotle" you get a free medium soda and at "Coldstone Creamery" students get ten percent off any ice cream. Refer to the DASB website at www.deanza.edu/dasb.

9 Know at least one way to use a toilet at school without touching the seat when the stall is out of seat covers.

10 Find out where the nearest snack machine is to your lecture class. Once in a while, pretend to go to the bathroom and come back hiding Oreos in your pocket. The cream in the middle helps you meet calcium and dairy requirements, and the chocolate is full of anti-oxidants. It's health in a bag!

DE ANZA VOICES: What are your tips for new students?

"Definitely come early the first week of school because parking will be hard to find."

Step up to success

200-point midterms. 3-hour-long labs. 20-page papers. 40-minute speeches. For many students who are new to De Anza, college-level classes can seem intimidating, even overwhelming.

Sometimes, the book-length syllabi prefacing courses are what make new students' hearts drop into their stomachs. But more often, discouragement comes from the glaring, bespectacled eyes of their new instructors.

Upon discovering that your history professor has a Ph.D. and doesn't coach the football team part-time, you may be tempted to forfeit right from the start. You feel like making a beeline directly to the back of the classroom, hiding your head under your hoodie, and passing the rest of the quarter in a state of sweet apathy.

Don't.

In the professional world, who you know is often just as important as what you know, and in academia the same rules apply. It's easy to see the instructor-student relationship as completely functional, even adversarial. But if you want to make your transition to college 10 times easier, learn to get instructors on your side.

The first step is actually rather simple: realize that instructors are human. Just like you wouldn't enjoy standing up and speaking in front of an audience that's not listening, they wouldn't either.

Instructors appreciate interest. The names of students who ask questions and participate are more likely to stay in their minds.

Second, instructors appreciate serious students. In college, this means turning in all your assignments on time, attending every class meeting, and always being prepared to work.

This is often a difficult adjustment, but even if you mess up a little, there's an easy way to show the instructor that you're not there to waste their time: always sit in the front of the class. This will also help you concentrate. Too embarrassed? Just think of how embarrassing it will be to withdraw from the class in the eighth week because you know you're going to fail.

THE OPINION OF THE LA VOZ WEEKLY EDITORIAL BOARD

You don't have to be a straight

A student to earn an instructor's respect. In fact, having difficulty with a subject can often work in your favor. You should always attend at least a few of the office hours provided by your instructors during the quarter. Asking instructors for help will immediately invest them in your success.

Some instructors have quirks that you can use to your advantage. Take the time to learn these - they're invaluable when it comes to developing rapport. One professor at De Anza appears to grade papers entirely according to length. Another professor loves strawberry cheesecake.

Above all, make sure you take advantage of the opportunities offered by the De Anza faculty. In a few years, you may find yourself at a university where the professors pass on their teaching responsibilities to assistants, where few professors know their students' names, and some hold office hours at 2 a.m. because they know students won't show up.

De Anza instructors are, for the most part, very knowledgeable and professional. But more importantly, they want to teach. Come ready to learn, and they'll meet you halfway.

Socialized medicine not the answer

 in my opinion

One of the most talked-about issues in Sacramento, Washington, D.C., and all over the U.S. this past summer was health care reform. Between the politicking of presidential candidates, Michael Moore's health insurance exposé "Sicko," and a battle between the Governor and state Democrats right here in California, it almost seemed as if the American medical industry was on the verge of collapsing.

A common refrain heard among this cacophony of impassioned polemics was that the U.S. should adopt a single-payer health care system similar to that of Canada, and to a lesser extent, the U.K.

One of the more prominent voices in this choir belonged to California state Sen. Sheila Kuehl, who is expected to soon resurrect SB 840, a bill vetoed by Gov. Schwarzenegger last year that would mandate government-provided universal health insurance for everyone in the state.

Despite the noble sentiment behind such a bill, its passage into law would constitute a terrible mistake. In every country that has tried to adopt it, socialized medicine has been a disaster.

Not because there's something inherently wrong with socialized government services; health care is in some ways a natural monopoly that is able to produce more efficiently under a one-firm system than under competition. In fact, according to a study conducted by Harvard Medical School, nearly 30 percent of U.S. health care dollars are spent on administrative overhead costs that could be eliminated through consolidation.

In France and England, the mortality rate for prostate cancer is nearly one in two. In the U.S. it's one in five.

No, the fundamental flaw behind socialized medicine is that it assumes the problem to be allocation, rather than production. Any universal health insurance program will naturally boost demand for medical services, thereby inflating prices. If taxpayers wish to avoid paying through the nose, the government will have to set price ceilings on things like doctors' and nurses' salaries, prescription drug costs, and medical bills. Such a policy can only yield two possible results.

In the best case scenario, the quality of health care simply declines. Fewer, less qualified medical personnel are available to treat patients, drug companies produce progressively less innovative treatments, and hospitals invest less money in technology.

These claims aren't theoretical: In Canada, the average waiting time to see a specialist is 17.6 weeks. In the U.S., only 23 percent of patients wait longer than a month. In France and England, the mortality rate for prostate cancer is nearly one in two. In the U.S. it's one in five. Canadian Medicare has three PET scanners. The U.S. has 1000.

In the worst case scenario, corruption becomes rampant because there's no mechanism for allocating products and services, a role previously filled by equilibrium pricing. Bureaucrats, in charge of determining who gets what of the little that's available, become susceptible to bribes and influence.

Health care in America is not in shambles, but it certainly could be better. High costs have resulted from unhealthy lifestyles, ignorance of preventative medicine, and a broken insurance system. And, even though the current estimate of uninsured Americans (approximately 16 percent) is highly inflated, we should make sure that the number is down to zero.

There are many ways to fix these problems, but trading private incompetence for government just isn't one of them.
